Now that you know the basics, when is the right time to join a game in progress? On most games where a dealer is using a "shoe" you can join a game anytime. (A shoe is a device used mainly in casinos to hold multiple decks of cards – it is called a shoe because the early versions resembled a woman's high heeled shoe.) Find a spot you like, grab that seat and place your money on the table over the betting spot printed on the cloth. The dealer will convert it to gaming chips, and then you are ready to play. If you are joining a double or single deck game, most casinos require you to wait until the dealer shuffles to join in. Look for a small sign that says "No Mid-Round Entry", this is a policy utilized as a courtesy to other players who sometimes find it annoying to have players jumping in and out of the game. In this case, go ahead and find a seat, get your money out, the dealer will change it to gaming chips when they do the next shuffle. After that, you're all set to play. If you see a blank plastic card in the shoe, it is called a plug. It is put there to ensure that the last card in the shoe cannot be seen by the players.

Classic Blackjack uses a single deck, but many casinos and online gambling sites use 6-8 decks in their blackjack games.

The prices attached to the chips are set by the house, depend on the game you're playing, and reflect the stakes of the game. There are some general price patterns that most poker chips follow, such as the white chips representing the smallest values, but this is all information you'll get from the casino when you start playing.

Greeting us with a winning smile, Brian assured us that we were in for a great time. Of all the games and slots offered in the casino, blackjack, he told us, has some of the best odds for the player. A skilled blackjack player has an almost even chance of winning against the house.

"Theoretically, out of every 100 hands played, the house (on average) wins 55 against a skilled player, but the cards don't know that so many times you win way more than you lose," Brian said. "Blackjack is one of the easiest games to learn and with a little practice, you can master basic strategy and better your chances of winning." It is also a very social game, so if you're out to have fun, it's one of the best games to play. Brian is a "people person" and he claims that this personality type makes the best dealers because they can easily relate to the players and make them feel comfortable, which is important in a people-oriented business like a casino. Anxious to learn about the game, I asked Brian to give his 5 best tips
