In the United States, the national consciousness seems to consider online gambling as illegal. This is simply not the case. There are a few laws that govern online gambling, including the inappropriately named Unlawful Internet Gambling Enforcement Act. This law simply makes it illegal for banks and financial institutions to process transactions - not for the player to play. This law has done nothing but complicate the industry of online gambling, so rest assured that you do not have to worry about anything other than the fact that you may lose while you gamble, as this is a part of the game.

The one thing you really need to be aware of before you can actually start gambling online is that of the legal gambling age in your jurisdiction. The legal online casinos have made it a point to provide their players with a minimum gambling age as to prevent the violation of local and jurisdictional laws. Since some regions around the world require an age of 18, while others require you to be 21, you may not be able to play at the casino regardless of the age which they have established. It is vitally important that you find the legal gambling age in your municipality, state, province, nation, or any other laws which you must abide by.

With recent actions of the U.S. government trying to shut American players out from playing their favorite online betting games, finding a legal online casino is becoming more difficult. Although there is no specific law that says online gambling is illegal, many sites prefer not to accept players from America. The main issue for U.S. players remains getting funds on and off of a site. The laws put into place are set up to stop land based financial institutions from accepting transactions coming from a gambling related site. This however has been easily skirted with the use of alternative methods to deposit and withdrawal. Some credit cards actually still work, but it is becoming rare. The most common methods appear in the form wire transfers and pre-paid money packs.

For those who are a bit skittish about playing at an online casino, you have no need to worry. To date no one has been charged with gambling online or been accused of any such crime. The only people who need to worry about risking any legal action will be the sites offering games to Americans. Some states such as Washington, Louisiana and Oregon may have their own laws restricting specifically online gambling, but they have never been enforced. The site may decide to refuse service to residents of these states to decrease the risk of being shut down, but again the player themselves have no worry of legal ramifications.
