Here's what we look out for before listing an American roulette casino on this page:

We know nothing beats being able to deposit and play games with complete peace of mind. That's why we ensure that each casino we list here has a license from an established gaming authority, and games that have been certified for fairness by independent testing companies. We also look out for SSL encryption technology so that your personal data and banking details are always kept safe.

We review the bonuses a casino site offers so that you can always get quality deals. No matter which site you choose from our curated list, you're guaranteed a juicy welcome package when you sign up, which you can use to play American roulette, slots and other casino games. You'll also be eligible to more bonuses as a regular member, such as free spins, cashback, reload bonuses, and prize draws.

All the casinos on this page will have a lobby packed with hundreds of games you can play in demo mode or for real money. This means you can play free American roulette online or bet on the wheel for actual cash prizes. Aside from American roulette, our approved casinos offer several other roulette game variants, such as Multi-Wheel Roulette and Mini Roulette, and various free and real money slot machines and table games.

We would never list an American roulette online casino here if it lacked a good number of banking options or was slow with payouts. We make sure all our approved sites feature several credit and debit cards, e-wallets, and online banking methods to its members. We also make deposits and withdraw cash ourselves to confirm that each site is a fast-paying casino.

Before a casino makes the cut, it needs to show us that its site is optimized for several different kinds of devices. You can play American roulette on any device of your preference – be it a desktop PC, mobile or tablet and still experience smooth gameplay and great graphics. Some of the casinos on this page also have great apps you can download for the ultimate mobile gaming experience.

VegasSlotsOnline is one of the biggest free casino games hubs on the web, and a common question our readers ask us is whether free American roulette is the same as the real money version. The answer is “yes”, as both versions are essentially the same game with the same rules and software. However, both game types come with their own pros and cons. Below, you can check out the different benefits both versions can offer you and see which one you prefer.

Roulette may be a game with European origins, but it has long since become popular throughout the world, including the United States. American roulette is now one of the two main versions of this casino classic, popular throughout most of North and South America, as well as in the Caribbean. It is also commonly offered at online casino sites, which usually spread both versions of the games (sometimes with other variants as well).

Among fans of the game, the American variation tends to get something of a bad rap. It is true that it comes with a higher house edge than European tables, with no real advantages to make up for that fact. But it’s still a very social and entertaining game, and if this version is the only one available, you may well find that you will enjoy playing it all the same. Check out our free roulette simulator above and you’ll see for yourself what a great time American roulette offers.

The American roulette game differs from its European counterpart in only one notable way: the presence of two zeroes on the wheel instead of just one. Unfortunately, this is universally a bad thing for players, which means that when you have the choice, you’ll probably want to play the European version.

Game real roulette money

The issue comes from the fact that both games offer the same payouts for all bets. These payouts are mathematically designed to be 100% fair for a wheel with 36 pockets; any extra pockets give the casino the advantage. On a European wheel, there is just one extra pocket (the single zero), which sets the house edge at 2.70%.

The second zero on American roulette wheels nearly doubles that edge, increasing it to 5.26%. In fact, the difference is sometimes even larger: some European games use rules that offer players even better odds on even money bets by sometimes returning part or all of their bet if the result of the spin is a zero. With the action and gameplay being exactly the same in both versions, it’s clear that European roulette is without a doubt the better bet for players.

Roulette is a game in which players place bets on where a ball will land on a circular wheel that contains dozens of different numbered pockets. On an American roulette wheel layout, you will see 38 pockets in total: the numbers 1-36, as well as 0 (zero) and 00 (double zero). Each of these pockets is exactly the same size, meaning all numbers are equally likely to be hit on any given spin. The zero and double zero are painted green, while the remaining numbers are evenly split between red and black.

It’s incredibly easy to get to grips with American roulette’s rules. Below, we’ve provided a quick overview of how to play online American roulette so that you can master the game in no time:

Decide how much cash or credits you want to stake on a game. Virtual chips will be displayed on the screen in various colors and sizes, all of which denote different values. For instance, the larger a chip is, the more value it has. It’s important that you also check out the minimum and maximum table stakes before you play.

Before each spin on the American roulette wheel, players have the options of making as many bets as they like, with a variety of different options offered. Of course, you can also choose to pick a single number and run with it, hoping that it will be hit. However, number combinations can also be covered by a single bet. To bet online, you simply need to select your chip and drag it onto the table layout.

Once you’ve placed your chips on the table layout, you can hit the “spin” button for the American roulette wheel to do its magic. You will not be able to alter your bet or add a new one while the wheel is spinning. The ball will fall into one of the American roulette wheel’s numbered pockets, and any winnings will be paid out instantly and added to your balance. The game resets, and you can play again.

You’ll have the option to double your bet to save time or click the “rebet” button after a spin to keep the same bet for the next one. There is also a “clear bet” button should you wish to try a different bet altogether.

Wagers are made over a large layout on the table next to the wheel; in live casinos, there is plenty of room for multiple players to start around the table and reach out to place their own bets.

Here’s a quick rundown of the betting options available on an American roulette table, divided into the “inside” bets – which generally cover only a few numbers or less – and “outside bets,” which cover large portions of the wheel at lower payouts.

Real roulette game money

Split: A bet covering any two adjacent numbers on the layout that pays 17-1.

Street: A bet that covers a row of three numbers, paying out 11-1.

Roulette money real game

Six Line: A bet covering two consecutive rows (six numbers in total) which pays out at 5-1.

Top Line: A bet that covers the 0, 00, 1, 2, and 3, which pays 6-1.

Game real money roulette

Column Bets: These bets cover a column of 12 numbers and pay out at 2-1 odds.

Dozen Bets: These bets cover 12 consecutive numbers (such as 1-12 or 13-24), and also pay out at 2-1.

Game real money roulette

Odd/Even: These bets cover the appropriate 18 numbers and pay out at even money.

Red/Black: These bets cover all numbers of the color selected, paying out at even money.

Game roulette money real

1-18/19-36: These bets cover all of the numbers in the range selected, and again pay even money.

If you’ve read through our roulette odds guide, you’ll understand that knowing the odds of each bet winning will help you make more informed decisions during the play. We’ve compiled each American roulette bet’s payouts and odds in our easy-to-use chart below. You can consult it here as you play or download a handy PDF version to your device.

In a live American roulette game, players will be able to make bets for a minute or so before the croupier (or dealer) will place the ball in the outside of the wheel, causing it to spin rapidly. Players will then have a few more seconds to finalize their bets before the croupier closes the action. Once the winning number is determined, the losing chips will be swept off the table, and then winning wagers will be paid before the table opens again for more betting.

Since this is a game that can accommodate many different players, steps need to be taken to ensure that each player’s bets can be identified. This is usually done by having each player convert their money into special chips that are only valid at the roulette table. Each player gets their own color, which can represent any denomination that is appropriate: a typical low-stakes player might use their chips at $1 each, while other players might count each chip as $5 or more.

Of course, none of these measures are required in online versions of this game. When you play on our roulette simulator or at one of our top online casinos, you can take long as you want to figure out your bets and trigger a spin whenever you like, allowing you to have full control over the pace of play.

There’s nothing (legal) that you can do to influence what number the ball will fall on, and the days of biased wheels at casinos is all but over, which means that your results in roulette will almost certainly come down to pure luck. But we can still give you a few top tips that might make the game a bit more enjoyable, and help you avoid some common mistakes.

When it comes down to the nitty-gritty, American roulette is a game of luck and every outcome you get is based on chance. We think that the best way to prepare yourself is by knowing the rules and the different bets you can make so can figure out which ones work for you. Play our American roulette simulator for free right here on this page and familiarise yourself with the game before you play for real money.

The best way to win real money on American roulette (and minimize your risk of losing) is to focus on outside bets. While betting on odds/even, black/red, and high/low won't lead to life-changing wins, they do give you the highest chances to score cash. They are the best bets in American roulette, paying 1:1 and giving you an almost 50 percent chance to win. They're very ideal bets for beginners, but high rollers looking for big thrills might be put off.

Real roulette money game

It's important to realize that while almost all bets on the table have the exact same house edge (5.26% in the American game), there is one major exception. The unusual Top Line bet that covers the two zeroes and 1, 2 and 3 offers 6-1 odds, but this isn't quite enough to measure up with all of the other wagers on the table. This option comes with a 7.9% house edge, which is by far the worst figure in the game. For this reason, we'd advise you avoid this bet.

You might hear about popular betting systems that other players will swear can help you overcome the house edge in this game. We're sorry to say that this isn't the case: no sequence of bets can change the fact that the casino has the advantage on each one you make. That said, they also can't hurt you mathematically and they do help you have an organized staking plan, so if you find one you enjoy, feel free to use it! For instance, many players enjoy using the Martingale system, in which they start with a small wager on one of the even money bets and then double it after every loss, returning to the initial amount after a win.

The biggest mistake you can do is believe that one spin of the American roulette wheel will affect the outcome of the next spin. Whether you play the game online or at a land-based establishment, you'll often see that the casino publishes the full history of previous bets. Some bettors will try to follow trends in 'hot' and 'cold' numbers, but any serious player will know that each spin of the wheel is entirely independent of the previous one.

Despite the unflattering comparisons to its European cousin, American roulette is still an entertaining game. Yes, if you have the choice between the two versions, you should always pick the single-zero layout: that's just common sense. But when the two zero option is the only one available, that doesn't mean you have to stay away from the table.

Despite the higher house edge, American roulette still has the same relaxed pace of play, classic atmosphere, and social gaming feel that has made it popular for well over a century now. And with the possibility of a jackpot-like payout on every spin, we're confident that people will be lining up to play this game at casinos worldwide for centuries to come.
